UVA THIS MONTH

UNIVERSITY COMMUNICATIONS

OCTOBER 2020
EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The October edition of UVA This Month was distributed on Saturday, October 31. The email was sent to about 260,000 users, and featured pumpkin carving, COVID-19 updates, and plans for the spring semester.

The October edition of UVA This Month saw Open and Click Through Rates soften from September. Declining readership and engagement is a trend that we are seeing across products and platforms. This is likely a result of the current state of the country, with the COVID-19 pandemic continuing on, and the election taking up significant amounts of news content in October.

Across nearly every single audience group, Open and Click Through Rates declined month over month. This further supports the theory that the changes we are currently seeing in performance are indicative of a larger trend. Key Takeaway: Understand that as we move through the election and the winter months, this trend may continue. If readers are overwhelmed with news content about the pandemic and the election, we may see softer engagement through the end of the year.

The share of clicks on stories within UVA This Month were fairly well split. Eight stories each earned at least 5% of the total clicks within the email, rather than one particular story earn the bulk of the clicks. This demonstrates that users are scrolling through the email to find content that they want to read, and not just clicking on one or two top stories within the email. Key Takeaway: Continue including a wide range of story topics within UVA This Month emails. Readers will find the content that they are interested in, even if they have to scroll through the email to find it.
